New Mexico State University announces a national search for the position of Director of the School of Teacher Preparation, Administration and Leadership (TPAL), and Academic Search is honored to assist in this endeavor. The Director of this School in Las Cruces, New Mexico, will report to the new Dean of the College of Health, Education, and Social Transformation (HEST).

https://tpal.nmsu.edu/ is devoted to the preparation of master educators, administrators, and leaders for public, private, and governmental institutions. The vision and mission of TPAL are closely linked to the role of education in this borderlands community and its advocacy for equitable education for all, especially historically marginalized and multicultural/multilingual communities and students with exceptionalities. The Director of TPAL will serve as an instrumental, collaborative leader and is expected to provide leadership and support for a full-time faculty of approximately 35 and overseeing accreditation for all undergraduate and graduate programs.

https://nmsu.edu/ (NMSU) is the state’s landgrant and space-grant institution, a comprehensive research institution dedicated to teaching, research, public service, and outreach. The University is the institution of choice for more than 15,000 students from 49 states and 89 countries. NMSU is proud to be recognized as a Minority-Serving and Hispanic-Serving university, offering a diverse, dynamic, and welcoming learning and working environment. The University seeks employees who share its commitments to equity, inclusion, and diversity.

Applications, nominations, and expressions of interest must be submitted electronically, in confidence, to NMSU-TPALDirector@academicsearch.org. The application deadline for full consideration by the search committee is February 28, 2022.
